

My mom won't let me go.

The constraint imposed by my family are absolute and unwavering.

I spent money on video games again.

I have strategically allocated a portion of my financial resources into virtual economies making a calculated investment in the digital landscape.

I don't want to have children.

The continuation of this bloodline will conclude with my existence.

I like to scroll through videos on my phones.

I am proficient in harnessing cutting-edge technology to delve into the vast and ever-evolving expanse of the digital world.

I need to go to school.

I shall undertake the educational journey with familial expectations and fulfill my designated role.
